

THE AUTOMOBILE IN ARMOR OF WAR

Machine Is On Exhibition At Washington.

Is Cased in Steel, Strongly Built,
Mounting Rapid Fire Gun, Is Effective.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP IDEA

Washington, Oct. 15.—Not to be behind the times in the adaptation of the horseless carriage to the needs of the army, and abreast of the experiments which have recently been conducted in various European countries, at least one American has been at work in an effort to widen the field of usefulness of the automobile in war time. There is on exhibition here this week a machine constructed entirely of steel, except for the solid rubber tires, and surmounted by a slender, though none the less effective and modern, rapid fire gun. In perfecting his adaptation of this now familiar vehicle to the needs of the military, the inventor has made a radical departure from the types which have of late been tried in Germany and Austria, for instance, in that he has made no provision in the way of armor for the protection of the chauffeur, the gunner, and assistant gunner. However, this lessening of the total weight will give him much greater speed, and in other ways his car is even stronger and better fitted to withstand the rough service than those put forward across the pond. Until very recently American and English inventors have confined their efforts to providing an easy-riding auto-ambulance, but this last invention seems to be a long step in the direction of securing a safe and rapid means of transmitting dispatches and doing scouting work, which heretofore has been done by the cavalry.

Basis of Machine.

A phase of the government ownership proposition which has not heretofore been discussed in the periodical press of the country has just been thrown into the limelight here at Washington, and it bids fair to become an important factor in the arguments of those who oppose Mr. Bryan's hobby. Briefly, the point made is this: With the government ownership of the interstate and intrastate railroads of the country, the party in power at the time of presidential elections will possess and undoubtedly exercise a very great and effective, but unfair advantage, in that the multitude of employees of the railroads would necessarily be active partisans of that party and probably would hold the balance of power at the pending election. It is pointed out that this same factor has entered into past presidential elections in connection with the employees of the postoffice and interior departments and their dependents and connections, and it is urged that with the railroads in the control of the government, the power of the federal or state government to continue itself in political control would be infinitely greater than at present or in the past. Such a condition of affairs would be all very well for the party in power, but it is urged in opposition to the government's taking a step which would make it inevitable, that results would spell disaster to the nation's welfare and prosperity, it being generally conceded that the long continuation in power of one political party in a republic is of doubtful benefit, if not actually dangerous to the best interests of all its citizens.
